Q11: What is a theme of the passage? Write a theme and one detail to support your answer on the lines below.

One appropriate answer would be: The theme of this passage is that apologizing sincerely can make a positive difference. A detail to support this theme is, "Maybe there was something magic in those simple words, 'I'm sorry.'"

Q12: Write a one paragraph summary of the story. Include at least 3 details in your summary.

An appropriate answer should include information from the beginning, middle, and end of the book; include the characters the king, Bartholomew, and the magicians; include the setting of the Kingdom of Didd; and include the problem and solution. It should NOT retell every detail in the story. One appropriate answer would be: This story is about a time when the King of the Kingdom of Didd was tired of only seeing rain, sun, fog, and snow falling from the sky, so he wished for something new. Bartholomew, a page boy, warned him that "even kings can't rule the sky," but the King didn't listen and ordered the magicians to make something new fall from the sky. The magicians said that Oobleck would fall from the sky, but they didn't explain what that was. The next morning, the Oobleck fell from the sky. The king was excited, but the Oobleck caused all kinds of problems because it was very sticky. Finally, the king was covered in Oobleck and stuck to his throne. Bartholomew told the king to apologize for causing this problem, and when he did the Oobleck disappeared. Then everything was back to normal, except the king was thankful for the four regular things that fell from the sky.
